SENATOR J. CULLERTON:

Thank you, Mr. President, Members of the Senate. As many of you know, after seven years on my staff, the Senate Democrats' Press Secretary, Rikeesha Phelon, will be leaving to start up her own consulting business. Rikeesha has been my spokeswoman from the beginning of my Senate presidency. She's the one who says the things I need to say but says them better than I usually can. Along the way, she's handled the media regarding impeachments, pension reform, budget questions, tax questions, and anything else they can throw at her way. So when John Patterson and I get some crazy idea, she's the one who steps in and tells us no. She is and always has been a true professional, who has represented this Chamber and this office with the highest standards and integrity. I will miss her presence, her advice, and her professionalism even as I wish her the best in her new adventure. So congratulations, Rikeesha.

He was working this morning on another complicated bill involving insurance companies and the -- and Big Pharma. His technical expertise is beyond question. We on the committee, and especially me, have relied upon him over the years. He has never failed to provide good counsel. He is sometimes considered to be the chief undertaker to the Grim Reaper on the committee. But his role was to ameliorate and come to a consensus, and I would hope that we would join him. He is leaving the Senate to become an -- a distinguished counsel to - guess what? - an insurance company. Ladies and Gentlemen, let's congratulate Andrew DeYoe for a wonderful service.
